Siding and Window Estimates

Prospective customers typically ask for multiple estimates and perform their own cost comparisons. Unfortunately, it is rare when the estimates are truly comparable. What most salespeople fail to disclose are the actual component breakdowns. The differences in the estimates can leave some customers wondering if they are being taken advantage of and/or doubting whether or not they are getting a good deal.

There are many ways companies can cut corners on siding and window installations to come up with a lower price and they do not benefit the homeowner;

- Is your contractor insured with both Workers Comp and General Liability?
- Is your contractor using the manufacturer recommended accessories and installing per manufacturer specifications ?
- Is your contractor changing all vents, corner posts and properly flashing all flash points ?
- Are you changing your own casing or is it being done by your contractor ?
- Will your contractor honor their labor warranty? Will they respond to callbacks?

Companies that cut corners to save five or ten percent on the job can end up creating serious problems for the homeowner;

- Manufacturer warranties could be voided or at best minimized.
- Can lead to damage to the inside of your home, your fascia, soffits, wood siding, fiber cement siding, aluminum and vinyl siding, windows inside and out, and could cause mold.

Contractors are aware that cutting corners will lead to problems. If they are willing to cut corners, more than likely they are not a reputable contractor and not concerned about the risk of property damage. They may not honor their labor warranty and come back if you have an issue. More importantly, will they still be in business if and when you need them ?
